CP 151.03	Policymaking and Political Advocacy	Barnes	The objective of the course is to provide a practical understanding of the entire public policy advocacy process to enable students to become knowledgeable participants in the important work of public policy change. Political advocacy is a complex mixture of recognizing the need for change, developing the content of the change, convincing decision-makers to adopt the change, and then implementing the change. Frequently adding to this complexity is the need to change public policy (laws, regulations, etc.). Students will learn a comprehensive and systematic approach to political advocacy to help them become policy activists.	Fall quarter Seminar/lecture with written project:2 Units
